Help strengthen the competitiveness of our students

The Master’s programme in Finance at Lund University School of Economics and Management is ranked 38th in the world by Financial Times. The programme is also ranked as the third most affordable education in finance. To further strengthen students’ skills, we want to offer training at Bloomberg terminals – an IT support system that allows users to receive and analyse financial information and read the news in real time.

When the Financial Times unveiled its annual ranking 2015 of the world’s best Master in Finance programmes, Lund University School of Economics and Management (LUSEM) was featured among the top 50.

The Master’s programme in Finance in Lund also stands out in a number of sub-categories in the ranking. The programme is considered third in the world in terms of the most affordable programme (“value for money”), 16th place for “international course experience” and a 19th place for international mobility, which is a rank of students’ ability to pursue international careers after the programme.

We are pleased to be considered one of the world’s best programmes in finance. But we won’t stop here. We will continue to work hard to further improve the quality of our programmes and develop our contacts with the business community.

FUNDING NEEDS

For us to be able to strengthen our students’ skills and international competitiveness with potential employers, we want to offer training for our students at Bloomberg terminals. These terminals are mainly used by financial institutions and departments in major corporations.

However, these terminals are expensive and an annual license for LUSEM amounts to SEK 500 000. Over five years, the cost would be SEK 2.5 million.

We are therefore looking for funding to see if our ambition can become reality.

We welcome all donations – large or small.
